PREFACE

In 2002 a change of leadership took place in CERES. At the Summerschool in June 2002, in Utrecht, CERES thanked its scientific director, prof. dr Arie de Ruijter, for guiding the School for more than eight years. Prior to 1994 Arie took initiatives to form a network for the training of so-called non-western studies, culminating in the decision by six universities to start CERES, as the national research school for resource studies for development. In 1993 KNAW acknowledged the School as a good initiative to organise PhD training and research in the field of development studies, a field that was until then rather scattered and, with the exception of the Institute of Social Studies in The Hague, quite marginal in the university set-up in the Netherlands. During the first five-year period (1994-1998) most efforts went to the establishment of a sound PhD training programme, and to the formation of seven working programmes, which would form the architecture of the School's research co-ordination activities. In the meantime a number of other research institutes joined CERES, and also the number of senior scholars and PhD candidates grew considerably. In 1998 the KNAW re-acknowledged the School, based on the performance of the first five years. During the second five-year period (1999-2003) the emphasis shifted somewhat. The scope of the School widened from 'development issues' in mostly Africa, Asia and Latin America, to 'societal transformation' in the world as a whole, with a combined interest in global and local problems of resource dynamics, development issues, and cultural pluralism (or 'multi-culturality'), and with more research projects dealing with research problems in the Netherlands and in other European areas. The recruitment of PhD candidates became ever more international (with currently the majority coming from abroad), and also contacts with colleagues all over the world intensified, including with CERES alumni abroad. The broadening of the research focus led to the establishment, in 2001, of a separate working programme which was called 'the management of meaning and the meaning of management' (WP8). It would also become the research home of Arie de Ruijter (next to his new job as dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences of Tilburg University).

Prof. dr Ton Dietz took over on Sept. 1, 2002. He had been a member of the CERES directorate from the start, representing both the University of Amsterdam and the Free University of Amsterdam. His role as representative of the UvA was taken over by Dr Johan Post, and his role as representative of the Free University by Dr Ton Salman. Dr Wil Pansters took over the role of Dr Wouter van Beek as a representative of Utrecht University, Dr Wil Hout the role of Dr Max Spoor as a representative of the Institute of Social Studies, and Dr Otto Hospes the role of Mr Ab van Eldijk as representative of Wageningen University and Research Centre. Mr Ab van Eldijk would become vice-director of CERES. Prof. dr Leo de Haan remained as representative of The Catholic University of Nijmegen. In the Board Prof. dr Isa Baud took over the role of representative of the University of Amsterdam from Prof. dr Ad de Bruijne. We would like to thank all, who served in the directorate and the board!

The new leadership at CERES started to prepare for the new round of evaluation and re-accreditation. Following the positive but challenging mid-term review of 2001, by a team of renowned international scholars, CERES started "pathways of development", an attempt to organise a follow-up of the 'search for common ground' project in the research school. Dr Wil Pansters and Dr Hans Siebers lead this intensive process, which a.o. resulted in a written document and in an initiative to start six 'think tank' groups to study six leading themes in the School, which cut across disciplines and CERES working programmes: about livelihood, governance, globalisation, transnationality, identity and knowledge construction. In 2002 a lot of effort was devoted to this process, by a large number of CERES members, and a few guests. The Summerschool of 2002 (at Utrecht, with Dr Wil Pansters as initiator and successful co-ordinator) was organised around these six key concepts. This process would continue into 2003, and would also be the organising principle of the Summerschool of 2003, in Amsterdam.

CERES also put a lot of emphasis on the improvement of publication quality during its second five-year period. It was regarded as important to shift the emphasis of publication behaviour: relatively less 'popularising', and more 'scientific' publications, less in books and more in journals, less single-author and more multiple-author publications, and more joint publications of senior and junior members. To guide and stimulate more 'strategic' publishing, the CERES directorate started a major overhaul of its 'publications rating' system, and a more explicit, and more inclusive, system of input-output valuation of research efforts. This had to be the basis for a self-evaluation tool, which could be used for judging individual, and group successes. It could also play a major role in the forth-coming re-accreditation process, and in discussions with university and faculty leadership of renewing membership of CERES for the 2004-2009 period.

CERES is part of a knowledge community, in which both academics, and practitioners work: policy makers of governmental and non-governmental agencies in the fields of resource management, development co-operation, international relations, and multi-culturality, but also 'think-tank' consultants and research departments of private firms in these and related fields. CERES acknowledges the importance of better linkages in the Netherlands, and the necessity of changing a 'membership organisation' into a 'membership and network' organisation. In 2002 preparations were started to get the Royal Institute of the Tropics, and the Institute for Migration and Ethnic Studies, both in Amsterdam, as new associated members of CERES. Both institutes are prime examples of 'out-reach' institutes, bridging the gap between 'pure' science, and 'public policy and public debate'. Others will follow.

Last but not least CERES continues to prepare for the changes, which will take place following the new university training landscape in Europe, with its bachelors-masters-PhD framework. CERES has the intention to play a role in the stimulation and co-ordination of relevant research master's initiatives in the fields of the School. However, it is also evident that the very diverse PhD candidates demand a flexible training structure, in which the current first-year programme, preparing for an adequate research design, will still be very necessary for most candidates joining CERES. The changes towards a greater synergy of European research and research training also demand the strengthening of a European network. CERES's annual summerschools can play a major role to develop more self-evident ties with European colleagues and PhD candidates with the same research interests.

There is a lot of work to do!

RESEARCH

During 2002 many researchers in CERES had an input in the six projects in the follow-up activity “pathways of development”, which were a result of the internal project “in search of common ground” of 2001, and which dealt with livelihood, governance, globalisation, transnationality, identity and knowledge construction (see preface). During the summerschool (Utrecht, June) many senior and junior researchers, both CERES members and guest from abroad and from other research schools in the Netherlands (our ‘sister’ schools ASSR and CNWS, and others) presented their on-going work and research results under the umbrella of these six research concepts (see ‘training’).

Highlights of this year’s research performance will be based on our new CERES publication rating system (see CERES website). Here we will ‘present the ‘honorary gallery’ of publications in the A league: journals with a relatively high impact score in the Institute for Scientific Information (ISI) system, and publishers of the highest status in our field. We specifically like to draw attention to A-level publications of our junior members or recent alumni: Jens Andersson, Josefiën Demmer, Cindy Horst, and Han Overman.
